The 31-attorney litigation boutique is known nationally for taking on complex, high-stakes disputes across a range of disciplines and industries.

Kluger Kaplan's trial lawyers have earned national recognition as determined and effective client advocates. Their expertise is in business and corporate litigation, real estate litigation, securities and financial fraud, corporate governance, probate and estate, bankruptcy litigation and debtor and creditor's rights, federal and state appeals, professional liability, intellectual property, class actions and complex matrimonial litigation.

The firm is called upon by general counsel from companies across the country to litigate big matters.

Its cases include litigation against Donald Trump's company, Alex "A-Rod" Rodriguez's divorce, the Fontainebleau Las Vegas director and officer liability case, litigation against developer Art Falcone and his Miami Worldcenter project, the Victor Posner estate battle, Claudio Osorio's investment fraud litigation and the Dollar Tree restrictive covenant cases.

Notable cases last year included a settlement of litigation in two states after client GardaWorld Corp.,

the world's largest private security company, accused RBS Citizens N.A. of shortchanging it on cash-handling services; resolution of a tit-for-tat budget and governance battle between Sweetwater Mayor Orlando Lopez and the City Commission in the wake of public corruption by a former mayor; a lease dispute that allowed Miami Juice Corp. to stay in place for at least another 17 years; and a complex international case that ended with the annulment of a marriage and the cancellation of a Ukrainian adoption in a case of alleged immigration fraud.
